BRIGHAM'S GUIDE.

JOURNEY ACROSS THE ROCKIES. A Veteran Frontiersman Tells How He

Led the Mormon Chief Over the Mountains and Into the Valley of Salt Lake. John Y. Nelson, the guide who in 1846 piloted Brigham Young across the plains and over the Rocky mountains to the site of the present capital of Mormondom, is one of the most interesting of the strange band of pioneers and savages now depicting the perils and pleasures of frontier life for the delectation of effete easterners with Buffalo Bill He was seated on a camp stool in one of the score or so of tents that line the sides of the broad upper corridor at Madison Square garden, his wife, a Sioux squaw, squatted at his feet industriously stitching with shreds of buffalo tendon for thread, a boy of 12 stretched on a couch of deer skins in one corner and a copper colored lassic of 8 sleeping peacefully on a bank of blankets in another corner. Others of their dusky broad romped in the long pas-sage outside with the papooses of the Pawnee or the Sioux and came at their white father's bidding to shake hands with the visitor. Bright eyed, black haired, blithe and quick, the elements of savage and civilized blood seemed strangely blended in their natures. There had been nine children of this turriage, the old trapper said, of whom fire were living, the eldest, a girl of 15, yursning her studies in a Brooklyn boarding school. To earn provision for their support and education he has turned his back on his oved mountains. IN THE FALL OF 1846.

"It was late in the fall of 1846, I think, Nelson began as he lit his pipe and shoved back his broad sombrero. "I was at Cottonwood Springs, Neb., living with an old Mexican half breed, who knew every inch of the Rockies like a book. We were doing nothing in particular and ready for a job when Brigham Young came along and asked my Mexican friend and myself to be his guides across the Rockies, promising us good pay. He had four companions, Mormon elders, I think, but I cannot remember their names Seven in all, we started with two emi grant wagons, one of them loaded with flour, bacon, coffee and biscuit, enough for two years' supply. I don't believe Brigham had any idea when he started just where he was going and when he would get back! It was a sort of prospecting trip. He and the elders called each other 'brother,' and the old man was a good natured, jolly sort of fellow. He talked a good deal of religious lings, but he was not the Sunday school, pious Jonah kind; would say 'damn it' just the same as I would, and played a good hand at euchre. I was quite a young fellow in those days, and as the old Mexican didn't speak much English. Brigham talked a good deal with me and tried to convert me to Mormonism. "He was about 40, well set up and with a big, strong head and neck. I didn't take much st sck in his arguments defend-ing polygamy, which Jo Smith had recently of a man who was pretty firm in his opinion and actually believed what he preached. "We didn't hurry ourselves much, makng only about twenty miles a day with the wagons, pitching our tents for three or four days at a time when we got into a likely region where game was pienty and exploring the country for miles around. I don't think we met a white man all the way across. There were lots of Indians, but they didn't trouble us, just coming into camp to trade off fresh meat or skin for bacon and coffee. Toward Christmas we struck Ham's fork, in western Nebraska, after making a journey of nearly 1,000 miles. There we were snowed up

That Tired Feeling

The warm weather has a debilitating effect, especially upon those who are within doors most of the time. This feeling can be entirely overcome by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives new life and strength to all advantage; but there there is no use for the gun, and in reality the jockey may be a good fox hunter in England. The rea-son that a short legged dog is the best for American hunting is that he will not drive the fox at the top of its speed for a long time. What gives the hunter the advantage and the greatest likelihood of success s to have the fox play. This the fox will not do if he is hard pressed by the bound. when he will lead straight off. A slow dog. then, is preferable, and it is a well known fact that a fox will play a dog an entire forenoon on a spot of ground not over an acre in extent. A fox has been seen to leap from the ground to the top rail of a fence and walk there for a distance of forty rods, using his tail as a balance and then to again leap to the ground, leisurely trot out into the open field, sit down in a place commanding a good view, and calm-ly watch the dog work out the problem of where he went to when the trail left the ground.-New Haven Palladium.
